

My Future Plans

After receiving my Masters degree in May, 2008, I plan to find a job as an instructional designer within the public education system. In my opinion, the public school system needs instructional designers with strong instructional technology knowledge and skills in order to accurately analyze problems in education and successfully improve the quality of education. I have researched several jobs within the Department of Public Instruction that seem to match my professional goal. I am a life-long learner and will always seek opportunities to learn, not only to expand my knowledge but to keep up with the rapid change of technology.
